

Christmas Food in Germany

by Fletcher

As you know, it is getting near Christmas and Germans have their market stalls open. There are definitely some that are more popular than others, but German food has lots of offer. Of course, through the year Germany will have different dishes but here are some Christmas ones that might tickle your taste buds!

- Baumstrudel – also known as chimney cake – is a Hungarian pastry baked on a fire coated with cinnamon sugar
- Knoblauchbrot – also known as German garlic bread – is basically what it says it is, garlic bread, but it is pan-fried in butter. You can top it with fried onions, corn, spicy chilli sauce and olives.
- Schaumkuss – also known as German chocolate bonbons – is a marshmallow meringue filling coated in chocolate.
- Currywurst is steamed fried sausages cut up and coated in spicy ketchup with a sprinkle of curry.
- Spätzle is a famous German dish that is egg noodles that are boiled then pan-fried in butter.

There are just a few to try from the Christmas markets around Germany. Maybe go and try some for yourself sometime!
